This program will allow you to further your knowledge of European life, economy, history, & politics in a highly immersive environment. Through coursework and site visits, you will become more knowledgeable about global problems affecting the Mediterranean - Southern Italy in particular. You will analyze issues such as migration, economic trends & challenges in the European Union, religion & identity in the Mediterranean, international criminal organizations, the global causes affecting the destruction of marine ecosystems in the Mediterranean, or the impact of international tourism on small Italian communities. The internship portion of this program will specifically target the career development needs of UF students. The program will include activities & assignments to foster the integration of experiential & academic learning and to help students articulate their learning & skills digitally through the development of an electronic portfolio (personal website).

20 minutes away from Pompeii, and an hour from Naples, the community of Sorrento combines the picturesque appeal of a small Italian seaside town with the dynamism of a premier tourist destination. Despite the flow of tourists, Sorrento remains an Italian small town, surrounded by olive groves, lemon orchards, and fishing communities. The moderate size of the town with the combination of cosmopolitanism and Italian traditions make Sorrento an ideal setting for a truly immersive experience.

Four 1-day excursions: Pompeii, Naples, Amalfi Coast, and the island of Capri.

You will be housed at Sant’Anna Institute’s Residence Hall.
